BSPi Users Guide

Choose where to begin. These are the most useful entry points for a new member or someone evaluating BSPi.

Common Use Cases → Find the guide for your collection, purchase, sale, or valuation.

Search Basics → Learn how to find and interpret completed sales. Advanced Search → Boolean syntax, OCR field searches, and powerful query techniques.

This Users Guide explains the features available to BSPi members, with actual screenshots, practical Scouting examples, and step-by-step instructions. If you are considering joining, begin with the Screenshot Tour to see what membership looks like.

Research the history of Scouting memorabilia sales, one item at a time.

BoyScoutPatch.info (BSPi) helps collectors investigate historical marketplace transactions. Whether you found a few patches from childhood, inherited a collection, or regularly buy and sell, start with a question and look for comparable completed sales, not just asking prices.

About BSPi and its history

This edition focuses on Scouting memorabilia searches and historical sale comparisons.

Desktop and mobile use

BSPi aims to be mobile-friendly where practical. For extensive historical research—especially wide search-result tables, detailed photographs, and comparison of many records—a desktop or laptop with a reasonably large screen generally provides the best experience.

Start with navigating search results, then learn about the image previewer and individual item records.

For a quick alphabetical lookup, see the Index of topics.

Considering a subscription?

Explore What to expect from BSPi membership and Make the most of Search. Both use real interface screenshots and explain what the tools can—and cannot—tell you.

Why use BSPi?

Built for collectors by a collector	Made by an Eagle Scout and patch collector for people who need practical sales research, not generic price noise.
Research tools	Search by keywords, seller, item ID, date range, price, bid count, and more inside the member archive. Advanced searching by text in some images. Save item lists and data. Plot and charting tools have been added.
Image text search NEW	Advanced image processing scans auction photos, especially lots and poorly titled listings, and turns visible patch or item text into searchable words. This has started with BSA patches and is being expanded to past, present, and future records across all archive areas as time and funding permit.
Checklist & catalog support IN PROGRESS	Built for checklist creators, catalog editors, and price-guide maintainers. Save auction records as evidence for specific issues, varieties, and known examples, then organize them into saved items and future price lists for easier cataloging, comparison, and reference.
Safe and focused	No user-to-user communication is required through the site, and the archive is focused on collector research.

Common Use Cases

Choose the situation closest to yours. These seven use cases show how the same BSPi search tools answer different collecting questions. Begin with your first search if you're new to the site.

1. I found my childhood Scout patches — quick orientation and rough historical comparisons.
2. I inherited a collection — organize the work before estimating values.
3. I need estate or insurance research — preserve evidence and recognize appraisal limits.
4. I'm buying something on eBay — check whether the asking price is supported by comparable sales.
5. I'm selling one item on eBay — research a reasonable asking price.
6. I'm a serious bargain hunter — refine comparisons and avoid false bargains.
7. I sell collectibles regularly — use repeatable pricing research.

These examples focus on searching historical sales and interpreting the results.

BSPi Users Guide • 8

If you have one old patch, start by comparing its design to actual sold listings. This example shows a photograph expanded from the results.

Opening a result with the plus sign reveals a photograph and more information. Compare the picture with your childhood patch before using the recorded price as a clue.

BSPi Users Guide • 9

You found a few patches from your Scouting years. You recognize some names or numbers, but you do not know the precise issues.

A practical starting workflow

1. Choose one item with legible text.
2. Search BSPI for a distinctive name or number.
3. Look for the same design or issue in historical results.
4. Compare several relevant sold records and note how much they vary.
5. If identification is uncertain, keep the value estimate tentative.

Interpreting the evidence

Use comparable historical sales rather than treating one record as a definitive current valuation. Check item identity, condition, sale date, and whether the record covers a lot or a single item.

For more precise comparisons, consult search fields and filters. OCR may help discover poorly titled records, but OCR matches require visual verification.

Historical sales are evidence for comparison, not a certified appraisal.

Walkthrough: a patch with “Philmont” on it

Imagine finding a patch labeled Philmont in a box from your Scouting years. After signing in, enter Philmont in Search Sales and choose Search. In our verified example, the results included patches, books, belt buckles, neckerchiefs, and lots. That is normal for a broad keyword, but it does not mean they are all comparable to your patch.

Use the + control to expand a candidate result, examine its photograph, and compare the design, wording, and approximate age. Clicking the title opens the individual item page, where you can inspect more images and the sale record. If the exact patch is uncertain, write down what you know and avoid guessing a precise value.

When returning to Search, remember that previous results may be restored from browser storage. Use refresh if you need updated results.

I inherited a Scouting collection

A broad search may return many different kinds of Scouting memorabilia. Sort your inherited items into groups and compare only records that truly resemble each item.

Continue below for step-by-step instructions and examples ↓

You have boxes or albums of patches and want to understand what is there without rushing into a sale.

A practical starting workflow

1. Separate obvious groups by council, lodge, camp, or event.
2. Photograph items and record visible text before researching them.
3. Search a representative item from each group.
4. Distinguish common-looking items from those needing further identification.
5. Keep notes about the records you consulted and avoid adding up unsupported single-sale prices.

Interpreting the evidence

Use comparable historical sales rather than treating one record as a definitive current valuation. Check item identity, condition, sale date, and whether the record covers a lot or a single item.

For more precise comparisons, consult search fields and filters. OCR may help discover poorly titled records, but OCR matches require visual verification.

Historical sales are evidence for comparison, not a certified appraisal.

A manageable first session

Start with five representative items, not the entire collection. For each, record visible words, numbers, condition, and whether it belongs to a set or group. Search BSPi for one identifying clue, expand the candidate images, and keep the item URL as evidence when you find a close match.

Use Refine to narrow broad searches by date or other relevant attributes. If you know a seller or item ID, see seller and exact-ID searching. Keep separate notes for items with no convincing comparable records. A single large lot sale is not a reliable price for each item inside it.

Researching a collection for an estate or insurance

An estate valuation requires evidence that can be revisited. This item record illustrates the details to preserve.

An item page records the sale price, bid count, seller, date, and photographs. Keep links to the closest matching records as evidence, and note where comparisons are uncertain.

Continue below for step-by-step instructions and examples ↓

You need an organized, evidence-based picture of a collection, possibly for a consequential decision.

A practical starting workflow

1. Create an inventory with photographs, identifying details, and condition notes.
2. Research genuinely comparable historical sales for representative items.
3. Record the dates and circumstances of comparisons.
4. Mark items with uncertain identification or too few comparables.
5. For formal estate, tax, or insurance purposes, consult a qualified appraiser about required valuation standards.

Interpreting the evidence

Use comparable historical sales rather than treating one record as a definitive current valuation. Check item identity, condition, sale date, and whether the record covers a lot or a single item.

For more precise comparisons, consult search fields and filters. OCR may help discover poorly titled records, but OCR matches require visual verification.

Historical sales are evidence for comparison, not a certified appraisal.

An evidence trail for each item

For each potentially significant item, retain its identifying description, condition notes, photographs, and links to the closest historical sales. Exact item IDs help you retrieve the same record later. Document why a comparison is appropriate—and why other superficially similar records were excluded.

Distinguish observed historical sale prices from any formal valuation standard required by the estate, insurer, or taxing authority. BSPi is a research aid, not a substitute for a qualified appraisal when one is required.

Is this eBay listing a good deal?

Before deciding whether to buy, inspect the historical item record and its photographs—not just the price.

The individual item page helps you inspect what actually sold. Check the photographs and condition before comparing that historical sale with a listing you are considering buying.

Continue below for step-by-step instructions and examples ↓

You have found a Scout collectible for sale and want to check the asking price before buying.

A practical starting workflow

1. Identify the exact issue and condition in the current listing.
2. Search BSPi for the same item or close comparables.
3. Compare realized sale prices, not just other active listings.
4. Consider shipping, condition differences, and how old the comparable sales are.
5. Decide what you are personally willing to pay; a historical price is not a guarantee.

Interpreting the evidence

Use comparable historical sales rather than treating one record as a definitive current valuation. Check item identity, condition, sale date, and whether the record covers a lot or a single item.

For more precise comparisons, consult search fields and filters. OCR may help discover poorly titled records, but OCR matches require visual verification.

Historical sales are evidence for comparison, not a certified appraisal.

Before making an offer

Identify the listing's exact issue, then search BSPi for the same name or distinctive markings. Open the item records behind promising results and inspect the photographs. Use Refine if you need a narrower period or price range.

Include shipping and the possibility of condition differences in your decision. Do not treat the highest historical sale as the normal market price, and do not assume the site's Similar Sold Items suggestions are all genuine comparables.

How should I price a Scout collectible?

Similar Sold Items can provide leads when pricing a listing. The example below also shows why suggestions require verification.

Similar Sold Items are suggestions for further research, not automatic valuations. Open each promising record and reject unrelated items or lots before choosing an asking price.

Continue below for step-by-step instructions and examples ↓

You want to list an item without accidentally underpricing it or asking an unrealistic amount.

A practical starting workflow

1. Identify the issue and note its condition honestly.
2. Search for recent and older comparable completed sales.
3. Separate single-item sales from mixed lots.
4. Consider variation in results and the urgency of your sale.

5. Set your own asking price using the evidence, accounting for fees and shipping.

Interpreting the evidence

Use comparable historical sales rather than treating one record as a definitive current valuation. Check item identity, condition, sale date, and whether the record covers a lot or a single item.

For more precise comparisons, consult search fields and filters. OCR may help discover poorly titled records, but OCR matches require visual verification.

Historical sales are evidence for comparison, not a certified appraisal.

Preparing a listing price

Use completed-sale research to identify a reasonable range for the exact issue. Compare individual items with individual items; separate mixed lots. If you know a competitor's seller name, the seller search shortcut can help you inspect that seller's historical records, but those records alone do not establish value.

Note the date of the comparisons and allow for differences in condition, shipping, and fees. When the record is thin, a cautious price or an auction strategy may be more appropriate than an unsupported precise estimate.

Searching for overlooked Scouting bargains

A bargain search starts with carefully chosen filters. This view shows where to narrow a broad result set.

The screenshot shows the 'Refine Search' interface with the following sections:

- Refine Search: Narrow results by text behavior, dates, seller, item ID, listing type, bids, price, and display order. Includes 'hide' and 'search & hide' buttons.
- Search Text: Search Mode (All Words), Search In (Titles only), and an experimental note about OCR.
- Date Range: Date - from (01/01/2017 to 10/8/2026) and a time filter (1wk to All time).
- Listing Filters: Listed as (Auction Only*), Sold Status (Sold Only), Seller(s), Item Id(s), and Search Index (Scouting Memorabilia).
- Bid and Price Filters: Bid# - from (0 to 500) and Price - from ($1 to $100,000).
- Result Display: (Empty section)

Refine Search lets you look beyond obvious titles. Try image-text search to uncover possible overlooked items, but always check the photograph before deciding you found a bargain.

Continue below for step-by-step instructions and examples ↓

You regularly browse listings and want to recognize opportunities that other buyers may miss.

A practical starting workflow

1. Build a list of issue names, lodge numbers, camps, and alternate terminology.
2. Use targeted BSPI searches to learn the historical range for those items.
3. Investigate listings with vague titles using visible image text and OCR clues where available.
4. Verify the actual issue and condition before treating a low price as a bargain.
5. Keep track of uncertainty and avoid assuming past highs are normal prices.

Interpreting the evidence

Use comparable historical sales rather than treating one record as a definitive current valuation. Check item identity, condition, sale date, and whether the record covers a lot or a single item.

For more precise comparisons, consult search fields and filters. OCR may help discover poorly titled records, but OCR matches require visual verification.

Historical sales are evidence for comparison, not a certified appraisal.

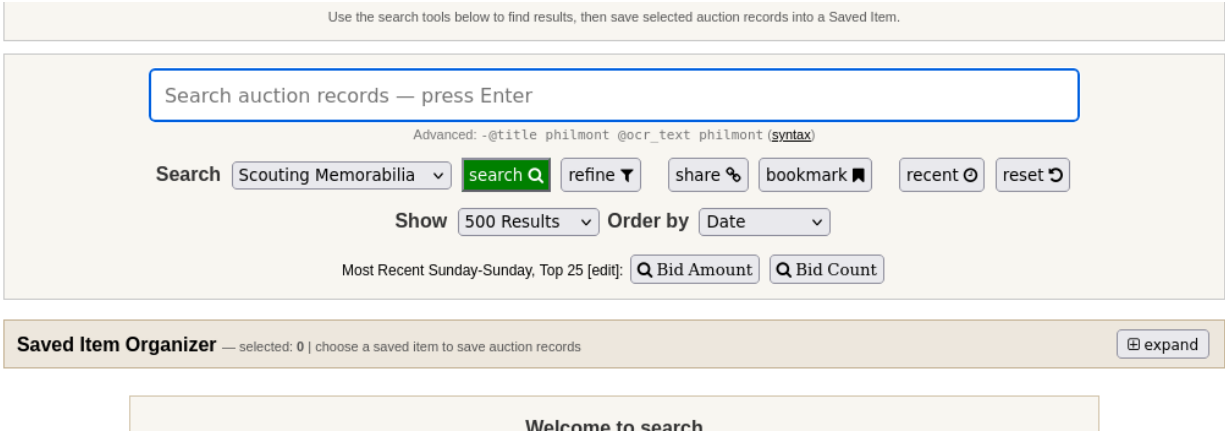

A repeatable search habit

Use distinctive names, issue numbers, and alternate wording in Search. Try title-only versus OCR-assisted search to discover different candidates. The OCR index is experimental: verify every interesting match against the photograph before deciding that a poorly titled listing is a bargain.

Use the expanded image preview to inspect candidates, and check the individual item record for more photographs and historical context. Avoid making purchase decisions solely from a search result's title or one exceptional past price.

Pricing Scouting inventory systematically

Repeated pricing work benefits from consistent search settings. These shortcuts can make that review more efficient.

The screenshot displays the BSPI search interface. At the top, a light beige banner reads: "Use the search tools below to find results, then save selected auction records into a Saved Item." Below this is a search bar with the placeholder text "Search auction records — press Enter". Under the search bar, the advanced search syntax is shown: "Advanced: -@title philmont @ocr_text philmont (syntax)". The search controls include a "Search" button with a dropdown menu set to "Scouting Memorabilia", a green "search" button with a magnifying glass icon, a "refine" button with a downward arrow, a "share" button with a link icon, a "bookmark" button with a flag icon, a "recent" button with a circular arrow icon, and a "reset" button with a circular arrow icon. Below these are "Show" and "Order by" dropdowns. The "Show" dropdown is set to "500 Results" and the "Order by" dropdown is set to "Date". At the bottom of the search controls, it says "Most Recent Sunday-Sunday, Top 25 [edit]:" followed by two buttons: "Q Bid Amount" and "Q Bid Count". Below the search controls is a "Saved Item Organizer" section with the text "selected: 0 | choose a saved item to save auction records" and an "expand" button. At the very bottom, a light beige banner reads "Welcome to search".

These quick Search controls help you change how many records you see and how they are ordered. Use them to review recent sales or bidding activity before pricing inventory.

You regularly sell collectibles and need consistent research habits across many listings.

A practical starting workflow

1. Group inventory by recognizable issue or collecting category.
2. Use consistent search terms and comparable-selection criteria.
3. Note date, condition, lot composition, and unusually high or low sales.
4. Distinguish fast-moving common inventory from items requiring deeper research.
5. Recheck evidence periodically rather than treating old price research as permanent.

Interpreting the evidence

Use comparable historical sales rather than treating one record as a definitive current valuation. Check item identity, condition, sale date, and whether the record covers a lot or a single item.

For more precise comparisons, consult search fields and filters. OCR may help discover poorly titled records, but OCR matches require visual verification.

Historical sales are evidence for comparison, not a certified appraisal.

Consistent research across inventory

Use a standard sequence: identify the issue, search exact terminology, refine the period and listing characteristics, inspect item details and images, and record several appropriate comparisons. Seller and item-ID filters help revisit specific evidence.

Record uncertainty explicitly when sales are sparse or when the only results are lots. Repeat the research when listing conditions or market activity change. This use case focuses on price research.

The member Search Sales page is where the research starts.

Search syntax: from keywords to OCR discoveries

Begin with the ordinary keyword box; you can also type advanced field expressions directly into it. The annotated screenshot identifies both entry points.

The actual member search field with `Philmont` entered, ready to submit. This is a screenshot of the live interface; no search was submitted to capture the example.

Continue below for step-by-step instructions and examples ↓

The blue-outlined input contains the query. The search button is immediately below it, alongside Refine and other shortcuts.

1. Begin with ordinary words

Type `Philmont` and press Enter (or choose search). This searches listing titles by default. A broader phrase such as `Philmont patch` can narrow your results, depending on the selected Search Mode. Compare the photographs rather than assuming every listing with those words is the same patch.

2. Use the main box for field-specific searches

The next examples show exactly what to type in the Search Sales box.

BSPI also accepts Sphinx extended query syntax directly in the main Search box. You do not have to open Refine to use the OCR field. The current application recognizes explicit `@title` and `@ocr_text` fields and automatically switches Search Mode to Boolean Expression when it sees a field expression.

Enter in the main Search box	What it asks BSPI to search
<code>Philmont</code>	Ordinary title search using the current mode
<code>@title philmont</code>	The listing title field
<code>@ocr_text philmont</code>	Text extracted from listing photographs

Enter in the main Search box	What it asks BSPi to search

Enter -@title philmont @ocr_text philmont to look for Philmont in image text while excluding matching titles. This is a discovery technique, not a guarantee that the item is a bargain.

The last example is printed directly below BSPi's Search box. It can help uncover a potential hidden gem: an item whose photographed lettering mentions Philmont even though the seller didn't use that word in the title. It is a discovery technique, not proof of a bargain.

The Refine panel offers the same basic field scopes through Search In. Advanced field syntax entered in the main box takes precedence over the ordinary title/OCR scope selector, so these examples work without opening this panel.

3. A practical OCR search workflow

Start with a normal Philmont title search to understand what obvious listings look like. Next try `@ocr_text philmont` to find photographs with recognized lettering. Finally try `-@title philmont @ocr_text philmont` to focus on records where that word may be missing from the title. Open the expanded photographs and check the patch design, lettering, condition, and whether the listing is a mixed lot.

OCR is experimental. Its output can contain misread embroidery, partial text, and unrelated words from other objects in a photograph. Not every listing has OCR coverage, and matching image text does not establish a particular issue or value.

4. If you prefer menus instead

Open Refine → Search Text. Search Mode offers All Words, Any Words, and Boolean Expression. Search In offers Titles only, Extracted patch text only, and Titles + extracted patch text. Those choices are useful when you don't want to type field expressions yourself.

For further background, use BSPi's built-in Sphinx boolean syntax reference. Start with the examples above rather than attempting complicated expressions immediately.

Search results can change as new historical listings are added to the archive.

When a broad search returns too many unrelated items, use Refine on the Search Sales page. The panel is headed Refine Search and provides several groups of controls.

BSPi Users Guide • 37

Search Text

Search Mode and Search In control how and where your terms are matched. The panel includes an information link about match modes and search syntax. One search scope concerns OCR-extracted patch text, explicitly marked EXPERIMENTAL because extracted words may be incomplete or noisy.

Date Range

Set Date - from and to, or choose a shortcut such as 1wk, mtd, ytd, 30d, 90d, 6m, 1y, a displayed calendar year, or All time.

Listing Filters

Choose Listed as and Sold Status, or narrow by Seller(s) and Item Id(s). The form says multiple seller IDs or item IDs may be separated by spaces or commas. The page notes that only auctions have been collected since 2021.

Bid and Price Filters

Use Bid# - from/to or Price - from/to to limit the range of records. These are historical listing attributes, not automatic estimates of what your own item is worth.

Result Display

The panel offers Show / Order and a descending-order choice. It also provides Reset All, hide, and search & hide controls.

Practical beginner advice

Start with one identifying word or number, inspect the result mix, and change one filter at a time. For a specific patch, use its visible wording, lodge number, event, or year to narrow the candidates. Be especially careful not to compare an individual patch with a mixed lot.

Exact Search Mode and Search In options

The Search Mode choices include All Words, Any Words, and Boolean Expression as Search Mode choices. The Search In choices are Titles only, Extracted patch text only, and Titles + extracted patch text. The latter two use experimental OCR evidence; an OCR text match does not establish that the photographed item is the same issue as yours.

For direct shortcuts, see Finding a seller or specific item ID.

Search fields and filters

The advanced controls let you narrow a search by words, dates, sellers, and listing characteristics. Use the screenshot as a map of the available fields.

BSPi's public feature description lists searching by keywords, seller, item ID, date range, price, and bid count. These are useful when a broad search returns too many results.

For example, begin with a recognizable OA lodge number or camp name, then narrow by date or price to compare a more relevant group of historical transactions. An item ID can help locate a specific marketplace record when you already know it.

Avoid treating a high bid count as proof of rarity or a high price as proof that every similar-looking item is valuable. Review the underlying item and its context.

For an explanation of each field, see Refining a Search. Review the selected values before submitting the search.

What to expect from BSPi membership

The screenshot displays the 'Search Sales' interface. On the left, there are navigation links: 'Search Sales', 'Saved Items', 'Price Guides', 'User Docs', 'Settings', and 'Logout'. Below these is a circular logo for the Boy Scouts of America and a red '8 BIT AUCTION . COM' button. The main search area has a title 'Search Sales' and a subtitle 'Search completed auction records across the archive by keywords, seller, item ID, date range, and more.' Below this is a search bar with the text 'Search auction records — press Enter' and an advanced search syntax example: 'Advanced: -@title philmont @ocr_text philmont (syntax)'. The search results show 'Scouting Memorabilia' with 500 results, ordered by Date. There are buttons for 'search', 'refine', 'share', 'bookmark', 'recent', and 'reset'. Below the search bar, there are buttons for 'Show 500 Results' and 'Order by Date'. At the bottom of the search results, there are buttons for 'Most Recent Sunday-Sunday, Top 25 [edit]: Q Bid Amount Q Bid Count'. On the right side, there are links for 'Trending Deals', 'Free Search', 'Got feedback?', a '100% MONEY BACK' guarantee badge, and an 'Email me!' button. At the bottom of the page, there is a copyright notice: '© Brett Estrade / BoyScoutPatch.info (BSPi). Rights reserved in the software and site. If you are considering a subscription, this member documentation shows the real subscriber interface. Start with the captioned Screenshot Tour for a visual overview before reading the step-by-step instructions.

What you can do

With the Scouting Memorabilia archive, you can search historical completed auction records, review sale prices and bid counts, inspect archived listing photographs, refine by dates and other attributes, and open individual item records. You can also search recognized text from some item photographs, use quick views of recent activity, and work with Saved Items for organizing research.

A realistic first session

1. Sign in to reach Search Sales.
2. Enter a distinctive name such as Philmont and run a basic search.
3. Review the results and use the + control to expand photographs.
4. Open a promising title to inspect the individual item record.
5. Try the Refine controls or efficiency features to focus your next search.

The records represent historical marketplace activity. BSPi cannot guarantee that a specific patch is worth a particular amount, that every historical listing has complete images, or that OCR will correctly recognize every inscription.

Which use case fits you?

Our use cases cover childhood finds, inherited collections, estate research, buying, selling, bargain hunting, and recurring inventory pricing. Each shows how the same search tools can serve a different practical purpose.

Desktop or phone?

BSPi aims to work on mobile devices, but a desktop or laptop with a reasonably large display is recommended for detailed searches, wide tables, photographs, and comparing multiple items.

Membership, billing, and help

The membership page explains the public subscription options and payment providers. You can review account settings and cancellation basics. For any difficulty, email support@boyscoutpatch.info with the affected page, operating system, browser, and steps to reproduce the problem.

These screenshots show real BSPi interface states. Features and membership terms may evolve; the online guide will be updated as the application changes.

Signing in to BSPi

BSPi members can sign in through the Member Login page.

1. Visit boyscoutpatch.info/login, or choose Member Login from the BSPi homepage.
2. Enter your Username.
3. Enter your Password.
4. Select Login.
5. After successful sign-in, BSPi opens the search interface.

If you have forgotten your password, use the reset it link on the login page, which leads to the password-reset workflow.

After signing in

After a successful sign-in, BSPi opens Search Sales at </search>.

After signing in

Successful authentication opens the Search Sales page. From the navigation bar, you can visit Saved Items, Price Guides, or Settings, and use Logout when finished. For an introduction to the Search page, see the interface tour.

After entering a keyword, BSPi displays completed sales in a table. This example shows the results you will learn to interpret.

This example search returns historical Scouting sales. Read the title and price of each record, then open likely matches; unrelated lots or collectibles should not be used to value your patch.

BSPi Users Guide • 44

Found a patch in a box and wondering what it might be worth? Start with what you can read on the item, not a guessed price.

1. Sign in. Successful login opens the BSPi search page.
2. Start with distinctive words, a lodge number, camp name, council name, or event name that appears on the patch.
3. Review candidate historical records for matching design, wording, issue, and condition.
4. If there are too many results, refine your terms. If there are none, try fewer words or a different identifying clue.
5. Compare several genuinely similar transactions before drawing conclusions about price.

A historical transaction is evidence of what one item sold for at one point in time—not a guaranteed current selling price or formal appraisal.

Understand historical prices or choose a situation-specific guide.

See the Search interface tour for the controls and the results shown after a keyword search.

Example: searching for Philmont memorabilia

In a verified Scouting Memorabilia search, entering Philmont and choosing Search returned a table of historical auction records. The page displayed Ended, Sold, Bids, Title, Seller, and Type, with recorded prices shown in the Sold column for the observed results. The interface reported 500 items in that result view.

The important lesson is that a broad word does not identify one collectible. This search included patches, neckerchiefs, belt buckles, books, and mixed lots. If you are holding a particular Philmont patch, do not average all of those prices. Look for the same issue, design, year, and condition, and exclude unrelated items and lots.

The interface also warns that final prices and bid counts may take up to seven days to settle. Be especially careful with very recent transactions.

Observed October 9, 2026, using one human-paced Scouting search. The records and prices are historical observations, not current price quotations.

Understanding historical prices

A recorded sale is one piece of market evidence. The item page below shows where to find the sale amount and context.

The item page shows what a particular listing sold for and how many bids it received. That is historical evidence, not a promise that another similar-looking item will sell for the same amount.

Continue below for step-by-step instructions and examples ↓

Sold prices and asking prices answer different questions. A listing's asking price shows what a seller hoped to receive; a recorded completed sale provides evidence of a transaction at a particular time.

When researching a Scout patch, compare the same issue or variety where possible. Pay attention to condition, whether the sale included multiple items, the date of sale, and whether the item is genuinely comparable. One unusually high result may be an outlier rather than a typical price.

A useful research conclusion may be a range supported by several comparable transactions, with uncertainty clearly stated. If few comparable records exist, acknowledge that limitation instead of presenting a precise valuation.

BSPi historical records support research; they do not by themselves constitute a professional estate or insurance appraisal.

The screenshot shows the 'Search Sales' page. On the left sidebar, there are links for 'Search Sales', 'Saved Items', 'Price Guides', 'User Docs', 'Settings', and 'Logout'. Below these is a circular logo for the Boy Scouts of America and a red '8 BIT AUCTION . COM' button. The main content area is titled 'Search Sales' and contains a search bar with the text 'Search auction records — press Enter'. Below the search bar is an advanced search syntax example: 'Advanced: -@title philmont @ocr_text philmont (syntax)'. The search bar has a dropdown menu set to 'Scouting Memorabilia' and a green 'search' button. To the right of the search bar are buttons for 'refine', 'share', 'bookmark', 'recent', and 'reset'. Below the search bar are 'Show' and 'Order by' dropdowns, with 'Show' set to '500 Results' and 'Order by' set to 'Date'. At the bottom of the search area are two buttons: 'Q Bid Amount' and 'Q Bid Count'. Below the search area is a 'Saved Item Organizer' section with a 'selected: 0' indicator and an 'expand' button. At the bottom of the page is a 'Welcome to search' message and a footer with copyright information and 'Up Top' / 'Down Bottom' buttons.

After signing in, BSPi opens Search Sales at /search. The page describes its purpose as searching completed auction records across the archive.

What you will see

- Search: enter keywords or other identifying clues; the input says to press Enter.
- Refine: opens controls for search mode, title/OCR scope, dates, sellers, item IDs, listing type, sale status, bids, price and result display.
- Share and Bookmark: shortcuts for returning to or sharing searches. Bookmarking a search is different from saving an auction record.
- Recent: a control to show recent results; the welcome message suggests this as a starting point.
- Reset: starts over with the search controls; review your current query and filters after using it.
- Show and Order by: result-display controls; available ordering includes Bid Amount and Bid Count.
- Saved Item Organizer: displays the number of selected records and provides a place to choose a saved item. Choose a saved item before saving selected records.

The navigation bar includes Search Sales, Saved Items, Price Guides, Settings, and Logout. A visible link labeled syntax leads to external SphinxSearch Boolean-search documentation. The page also offers Trending Deals, Free Search, and a feedback email link.

For your first search

Begin with one identifying word or number from a patch. If results are too broad, try Refine rather than entering many unrelated terms at once. Compare actual historical records carefully; a title match alone is not proof of the same issue or condition.

What a completed search looks like

A verified keyword search for Philmont displayed a Scouting Memorabilia results table with ended date, sold status and amount, bids, title, seller, and listing type. The result view reported 500 items. It also exposed selection controls and an expanded Saved Item Organizer; those account-changing actions were not used.

The page warns that the final price and bid count for recently ended items can take up to seven days to settle. Its results may mix very different kinds of memorabilia when they share a keyword. For valuations, compare the same item or issue, not every result containing a familiar name.

Returning to a previous search

BSPi uses browser local storage to retain search-related state, so returning to the Search page may show earlier results rather than a completely fresh starting view. This can be convenient when resuming research, but check the displayed query, filters, and result dates before interpreting the page as a new search.

To begin a different investigation, enter new search terms and run the search deliberately. Use Reset when you want to start over with the search controls.

Restored browser search state is not the same as Saved Items. Saved Items are a separate feature for intentionally organizing selected historical records. Browser storage can also be affected by changing browsers, private browsing, or clearing site data.

How long previous results remain available

BSPi retains the last search's results in browser local storage for up to 24 hours. When restored, the page displays “Showing your last search results from this browser” with refresh and clear links. Use refresh when you want updated results rather than the stored snapshot; use clear when you want to discard the restored result view.

This is separate from the preferences saved for archive selection, results per page, sort order, and descending order. It is also separate from intentionally saved auction records in Saved Items. Browser storage is local to the browser profile, so it may not follow you to another device or private browsing session.

Search page before a query

The landing page provides a compact Search field and toolbar. Use Refine when you need the advanced controls, or Recent if you want to browse recently completed sales instead of entering a keyword.

Make the most of BSPi Search

Several time-saving controls are available without opening a separate research tool. The toolbar below shows where they appear.

Use the search tools below to find results, then save selected auction records into a Saved Item.

Result Display

BSPi includes several shortcuts that help collectors work efficiently without learning complex search expressions. This tour is especially useful if you are deciding whether full membership fits your needs.

Choose how many results to show

The Show menu offers 10, 25, 50, 100, 250, 500, 1,000, 2,500, or 5,000 results. Start with 25 or 50 on a smaller screen. Use larger sets when systematically comparing many records, but expect longer pages and more scrolling. The number selected limits the result view; it is not the total number of items in BSPi's archive.

Choose an order that answers your question

The Order by menu offers Date, Bid Amount, Bids Count, and Best Match. The expanded Refine panel also provides a descending order checkbox.

- Date: examine the most recent activity or work through an older period.
- Bid Amount: find higher or lower recorded prices within your selected search.
- Bids Count: inspect bidding activity, not necessarily item rarity or value.
- Best Match: prioritize search relevance rather than price or date.

These settings apply to the search results you request. Don't mistake the top result after sorting by price for the typical value of an item.

The Sunday-to-Sunday Top 25 shortcuts

The compact toolbar provides Most Recent Sunday-Sunday, Top 25 buttons for Bid Amount and Bid Count. Each sets the date window to the recent Sunday-to-Sunday period, chooses the corresponding order, limits the result set to 25, and runs the search. The adjacent edit link opens the Refine panel so you can adjust the criteria.

These are useful ways to explore notable recent transactions and heavily contested auctions, but neither shortcut automatically identifies the most collectible or undervalued items.

Share and bookmark searches

- Share creates a link representing the current search and copies it to the clipboard (or offers a copy dialog when necessary).
- Bookmark prepares the current search URL and browser-page title for a normal browser bookmark. Use Ctrl+D on Windows/Linux or Cmd+D on Mac to save it.
- Recent runs a search for recent records without requiring keywords.
- Reset resets search criteria and runs a broad search; it is not the same as removing an item from a Saved Item.

A browser bookmark is not a Saved Item. The former helps you return to a search; the latter organizes selected historical auction records in BSPi.

Efficient review of multiple results

The result toolbar supports Show Selected, Hide Selected, Check Filtered, Uncheck Filtered, and Copy IDs. These actions work with the selected or filtered records in the current result view. They are separate from permanently saving records in the Saved Item Organizer.

Use the + control to expand a row and inspect its photographs. Remember that expanding also checks the row; collapsing unchecks it. This matters when preparing a selection for later use.

Find overlooked items with OCR

In Refine → Search Text → Search In, choose Extracted patch text only or Titles + extracted patch text to search words recognized in auction photographs. OCR can reveal candidates hidden by vague seller titles, particularly mixed lots. It is explicitly experimental, so treat the results as leads and inspect the images yourself.

For examples and limitations, see OCR image-text search, Refining Search, and Understanding historical prices.

Search tools help you examine historical sales; they do not guarantee future prices or results.

Finding a seller or a specific item

To investigate a known seller or listing, use the seller shortcut or the exact item-ID field. This example shows a result with additional information visible.

BSPI Users Guide • 54

BSPi lets you search by seller name and by marketplace item ID. These are useful when you already have a listing or want to examine records from one seller.

Click the seller search icon

In Search results, the Seller column shows a small magnifying-glass button next to a separate external-link icon. Clicking the magnifying glass adds that seller's username to the Seller(s) search filter and immediately runs a search. If a seller filter is already present, BSPi appends the new seller name rather than replacing it.

The external-link icon is different: it opens BSPi's seller-related eBay link. Do not confuse it with filtering the archive by seller.

To search by seller manually, open Refine → Listing Filters → Seller(s) and enter one or more seller IDs separated by spaces or commas. Clear the seller filter when returning to a general search; otherwise you may continue seeing only that seller's records.

Find a specific item ID

Each BSPi item record has an eBay item ID. You can find it in the Item Details section of an individual record, alongside a shareable BSPi URL.

To search by ID, open Refine → Listing Filters → Item Id(s) and enter one or more IDs, separated by spaces or commas. Then run the search. This is more precise than searching for words from a listing title.

Important: In Search results, the title links to the item-details page; the item ID is not shown as a separate clickable search shortcut in the compact result row. Use the dedicated Item ID(s) field for an exact ID search.

When to use these features

- Buyer: identify the exact listing you're evaluating, then compare other historical sales.
- Seller: examine past sales by a particular seller, while remembering that seller history alone does not determine an item's value.
- Inherited collection: use known item IDs from previous research notes to retrieve the exact evidence again.

Navigating search results

The results page contains shortcuts for inspecting and moving among records. The numbered screenshot identifies the most useful starting controls.

BSPI Users Guide • 56

Once a search completes, the Search Sales page displays historical auction records in a table. In a verified Scouting search, the visible columns included Save, Ended, Sold, Bids, Title, Seller, and Type. Results can include individual patches, other memorabilia, and multi-item lots, even when they share the same search term.

Reading the results

Start with the Title to identify possible matches, then check Ended, Sold, and Bids for historical context. Seller and Type provide additional context. Do not treat a title match as proof that the item is the same issue or condition as yours.

The interface provides TOP and BOT navigation links, and a jump to bottom link appears in the results heading. Use these to move through a long results page and return to the search controls without extensive scrolling. Check your query and filters when you return to the top, especially if BSPi has restored a previous search from browser storage.

Previewing and opening records

Use the + control to expand a row and inspect its photographs. Selecting the title opens the individual item record in a separate tab. See Image previewer and Individual item records.

Need assistance?

If a result, preview, navigation control, or image does not work as expected, see Getting help. Include the page or item URL and steps to reproduce the problem.

Opening a historical record in another tab

In the results table, the item title is a link to a BSPi item-details URL, such as `/item/details/<item-id>`. These title links are configured with a separate browser-tab target. Select a title to inspect its individual record, then return to the original Search tab to continue comparing results. Whether a browser actually opens a new tab can depend on its settings.

TOP and BOT navigate within the same long Search results page rather than issuing a new search.

Search by seller from the results table

The small magnifying-glass button beside a seller runs a seller-filtered search. The adjacent external-link icon instead opens the seller-related eBay link. See Finding a seller or item ID for the distinction and instructions for searching by exact item ID.

Expanding a row also selects it

Use the + icon in a compact result row to expand the image preview and additional details. The current interface also checks that record when it is expanded; collapsing it with ✕ unchecks it. The Saved Item Organizer may therefore show a selected count even if you only opened a preview. Selected does not mean permanently saved. See Using the image previewer.

Expanding a result reveals the image preview and related controls. Follow the numbered arrows to understand what each click does.

Follow the numbered arrows: 1 points to the + control on a collapsed result (use it to expand another listing); 2 points to > beside IMAGE 1 of 10 (next photograph); 3 points to the actual thumbnail (select it to open the item page); 4 points to the expanded listing title (another way to open its record). These are real click targets, not decorative markers.

BSPi Users Guide • 59

Photographs can be essential when distinguishing Scout patch issues, embroidery variations, condition, and mixed lots. The Search results interface provides an expanded thumbnail, photograph navigation and item details.

What to look for

When viewing a result, first verify that the photograph corresponds to the item title. If the listing contains several objects, identify which object you are researching rather than treating the entire lot price as the price of one patch.

The expanded preview and its basic controls have now been inspected in the authenticated browser. Do not assume every record has the same number or quality of images.

For an expanded examination, see Individual item records. If a photograph is missing, fails to load, or behaves unexpectedly, report the problem with the item URL, browser, operating system, and reproduction steps.

Expanding a result and browsing its photographs

Results have a compact row and an expanded thumbnail row. Open the row's expansion control to see a larger preview and additional details. Within that row:

- IMAGE 1 of N shows the current image and total available images once the image list has been checked.
- The < and > buttons move backward and forward through the available images. They are disabled at the beginning or end of the sequence.
- Selecting the preview image opens the corresponding BSPi item-details page in a separate browser tab/window, depending on browser behavior.
- The expanded row also shows price and bid information, seller, ended date, image count, listing type, and a direct item URL; other fields depend on the record.
- A Save to current saved item button is available when an appropriate Saved Item has been chosen. Do not confuse this with merely opening the preview.

Image counts may initially say checking... while the browser obtains the list of available photographs. If an image does not appear, allow it time to load before reporting a problem.

Expanded-row example

In an authenticated browser test, selecting the + control expanded the first Philmont result and displayed its photograph and additional sale details. Expanding a result also checks/selects that record in the current results view: the Saved Item Organizer count changed from 0 to 1. This is not the same as permanently saving the record to a Saved Item.

A Search result is a starting point for examining the evidence behind a historical marketplace transaction. Before comparing a price with your own collectible, inspect the individual record and any available photographs.

Remember that one historical sale is evidence, not a guaranteed current valuation. See Understanding historical prices.

Access and browser-session note

The results table's title links point to `/item/details/<item-id>` and request a new browser tab. Opening an item-details URL in a fresh unauthenticated browser session returned the public BSPi homepage in our test. Therefore, the item-page layout must be documented from an authenticated session; a direct URL alone is not sufficient evidence of what a subscriber sees.

Item-page layout

The individual item page displays a sale-status banner: Ended — Sold, Ended — Not Sold, or Ended — Final Status Unknown, depending on the record. Its photograph area supports < prev, numbered image buttons, and next > when multiple images are available. Clicking the displayed photograph opens the current original image in a new tab.

Below the photographs, the page provides View Listing and View Seller links. Bid History and Similar Sold Items links appear when corresponding records exist. The Item Details section includes eBay item ID, final price, bid count when applicable, listing type, seller, ended date, and a shareable item URL. Other fields and historical sections may be conditional.

If the archive has no images for the item, the page displays a No images found message with a support email link. Photograph availability can vary among historical records.

Philmont item example

An authenticated browser session successfully opened a Philmont patch record with two images, Ended — Sold status, final price, bid count, listing type, seller, ended date, share URL, and a Similar Sold Items section. The page's image buttons are numbered, with previous/next navigation. The displayed photograph links to the full image in a separate tab.

Similar Sold Items are leads, not appraisals

The Similar Sold Items section is described on the page as ordered by best title matches. In the updated Scouting-index example, suggestions are drawn from Scouting-related records but still include different kinds of memorabilia. Do not assume every suggested result is a comparable item. Inspect the item description, photographs, condition, and lot composition before comparing prices.

Why suggestions may not match your item

When opened from a Scouting search, suggestions use the Scouting index but still rely on broad title matching. They may include unrelated Scouting books, pins, patches or lots. A legacy direct item URL without a search index can still use broader matching. Verify the issue, condition, and sale type before treating a suggested result as a comparable sale.

Searching text found in item photographs (OCR)

OCR searching uses text extracted from photographs. The screenshot shows the field controls for this experimental capability.

The screenshot displays the 'Refine Search' panel, which allows users to narrow search results by text behavior, dates, seller, item ID, listing type, bids, price, and display order. The panel includes several sections:

- Search Text: Includes a 'Search Mode' dropdown set to 'All Words' and a 'Search In' dropdown set to 'Titles only'. A note indicates that extracted patch text comes from OCR and may be incomplete or noisy.
- Date Range: Includes a 'Date - from' field with a date range from 01/01/2017 to 10/8/2026, and a 'Date - to' field.
- Listing Filters: Includes a 'Listed as' dropdown set to 'Auction Only*', a 'Sold Status' dropdown set to 'Sold Only', a 'Seller(s)' field, an 'Item Id(s)' field, and a 'Search Index' dropdown set to 'Scouting Memorabilia'.
- Bid and Price Filters: Includes a 'Bid# - from' field with a range from 0 to 500, and a 'Price - from' field with a range from $1 to $100,000.
- Result Display: A section at the bottom of the panel.

The Refine panel includes an option to search words recognized in auction photographs. This can reveal items with vague titles, but OCR can misread embroidered lettering.

Continue below for step-by-step instructions and examples ↓

OCR stands for optical character recognition: software attempts to read letters and numbers visible in photographs. BSpI describes image-text searching for some historical listings, particularly where titles are incomplete or items appear in lots.

For Scouting memorabilia, recognizable lodge numbers, event names, council names, or lettering on a patch can be valuable search clues—even when a seller did not type them into the listing title.

OCR is imperfect. Small lettering, unusual embroidery, poor focus, multiple items in one photo, and decorative type can produce missing or incorrect words. Treat OCR matches as leads to inspect, not definitive identifications.

OCR coverage is incomplete, and extracted lettering can contain mistakes.

Where OCR appears in Search

Choose Refine and look under Search Text → Search In. The interface labels extracted patch text as EXPERIMENTAL and warns that the text may be incomplete or noisy. This is a useful place to investigate wording that may appear in an auction photograph but not its title.

You can also search OCR directly in the main keyword field without opening Refine. See Search syntax: from keywords to OCR discoveries for exact, copyable field expressions and an overlooked-item example.

Advanced Features: From Search to Research

Finding a historical sale is only the beginning. BSPi also lets members turn scattered auction records into organized, reusable collecting research. Whether you have a single inherited patch, a specialized collection, or a guide you want to share, the advanced tools help you preserve evidence, compare meaningful examples, and present your findings.

Your work has lasting value

The person is the author; the platform is the instrument. BSPi provides historical records, organization, research tools and a place to develop your work. You supply the identification, judgment, context, writing and care that turn those tools into useful knowledge.

Our aim is that your effort should benefit you, strengthen BSPi's shared research resource, and help the collecting community—a win for all three. You should be able to keep the fruits of your labor, develop them into finished guides, share them with others, and benefit economically from your own original work. Research that is not ready for publication should still be worthwhile.

Ownership, portability and independent use are principles we intend to protect. The platform's existing Price Guide proof can be printed or saved as a PDF. A complete, structured export of all original research, annotations and guide relationships, and a formal author agreement covering independent reuse and commercial rights, are not yet documented as available product features. They are requirements for further development, not promises that those controls already exist.

A guide's visibility and permission to publish it are different questions. BSPi may need to retain contributed information for internal searching, classification and organization, but that must not become a back door to republish or sell an author's identifiable work without permission. The precise terms are being developed and will be presented clearly before an author is asked to accept them.

What you can accomplish

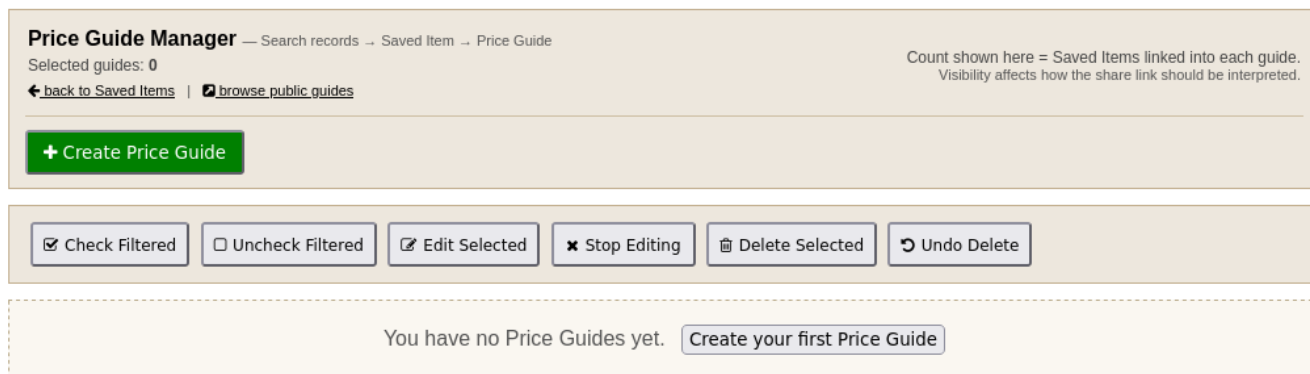

Your goal	BSPi feature	What it helps you do
Organize related collectibles	Price Guides	Build a browsable guide from individual Saved Items, choose its sequence and visibility.
Keep research together	Saved Items	Give an issue or collectible a name and description, then associate historical sales.
Review the underlying evidence	Sales Data	Examine, select, and manage the auction records associated with a Saved Item.

Your goal	BSPi feature	What it helps you do
Look for patterns	Market Analysis	Compare price trends, sale activity, sold status, bid distributions, and price distributions.
Document visual details	Image Annotation	Add context to collectible photographs and support identification.
Share or print a coherent reference	Price Guide Proof	Review a guide's order, summaries and underlying sales; print or save a PDF.

See the research workflow

A Price Guide is not simply a list of auction results. The basic structure is historical sale → Saved Item → Price Guide → proof. Each step adds organization and context while retaining access to the evidence.

The image below shows the Price Guide Manager, where members begin assembling guides. The next chapters show how to create items, associate sales, and examine the results.

The Price Guide Manager is the starting point for organizing related Saved Items into a larger collecting reference. The creation control is visible here; a guide gains substance as you add and review its items.

Continue below to choose the advanced workflow that matches your goal ↓

Choose where to begin

For an inherited collection, start with Saved Items and build up from individual pieces. For an established collecting specialty, begin with Price Guides and plan the categories you want to cover. If you already have historical sales associated with an item, Sales Data and Market Analysis are the next steps.

Historical prices are evidence, not automatic appraisals. Good comparisons still require attention to issue, condition, completeness, and whether a listing actually sold. The advanced features make that work more manageable; they do not replace the collector's judgment.

You can use these tools for personal research without publishing anything. Sharing or publishing a guide is a separate decision.

Creating and organizing Price Guides

Price Guides group related Saved Items into a larger collecting reference. Begin with a collecting subject, decide what belongs in it, and use the guide editor to organize the Saved Items you have already assembled.

Price Guide Manager — Search records → Saved Item → Price Guide
Selected guides: 0

+ Create Price Guide

☒ Check Filtered ☐ Uncheck Filtered

You have no Price Guides yet. Create your first Price Guide

The Price Guide Manager is where you create a guide, organize existing guides, and control their visibility. In this example the documentation account has no guides yet, so the creation button is prominent.

Continue below for the steps and examples ↓

Understand the three levels

1. Historical sale record: a completed marketplace listing found through Search Sales.
2. Saved Item: a member-organized group of related historical sale records.
3. Price Guide: a collection of related Saved Items, arranged for browsing or publication.

The Price Guide Manager explicitly describes the workflow as Search records → Saved Item → Price Guide. Creating a guide does not itself populate it with historical sales.

Start a guide

From the member navigation choose Price Guides, then Create Price Guide. Enter a clear Guide name and Description that explain what belongs in the collection. Choose Visibility (private, member only, or public), then set the Order numbers if you want to arrange multiple guides. The manager sorts by major order first, then minor order. Review the visibility choice before sharing a guide link.

Use a subject that can be consistently identified in historical listings; avoid mixing unrelated items merely because their titles share a word. An empty guide is a useful starting point, not a price guide with sales evidence.

Once the guide exists, open its manage link to associate Saved Items with it. The guide editor provides ordering controls for those Saved Items, separate from the order of guides in the manager. Review the membership and sharing settings before distributing a link.

A sound sample collection

For a Philmont-themed guide, first distinguish cloth patches from belt buckles, books, pins, and multi-item lots. Make a Saved Item for each genuinely identifiable issue or type. Add historical sales to those Saved Items only when the photographs and titles support the identification. The number of sales is not the number of distinct collectible issues.

Continue with Creating Saved Items, then return here to assemble the guide.

Creating Saved Items from historical sales

Saved Items let you organize historical sale records under a collectible you want to research. This is different from the browser's temporarily restored search results.

Saved Item Manager — Auction records → Saved Item → Price Guide
Selected saved items: 0
← back to Search | Manage price guides

Add selected to guide: --Choose price guide-- add selected

+ Create Saved Item

☒ Check Filtered ☐ Uncheck Filtered Edit Selected Stop Editing Delete Selected Undo Delete

You have no Saved Items yet. Create your first Saved Item

The Saved Items manager lets members create and manage individual saved collectibles. The documentation account shown here has no Saved Items yet.

Continue below for the workflow ↓

Create a Saved Item

Choose Saved Items → Create Saved Item. Give it a Saved Item name that identifies the issue or collectible and add a Description explaining what belongs in this group. Primary item id is optional; use it to designate an existing archived record as the cover image. You can leave it blank until you have chosen an appropriate example. Creating an item does not automatically add any sales.

Add historical records

1. Search for a collectible in Search Sales and examine the completed-sale photographs.
2. Select only listings that actually belong to the same issue or a clearly defined group.
3. Use the Saved Item Organizer to choose the intended Saved Item, or create one from the Saved Items manager.
4. Save the selected auction records, then open the Saved Item to inspect and manage its data.
5. Return to the Price Guide Manager when the Saved Item is ready to include in a guide.

Do not combine a mixed lot with a single-patch sale without noting the difference. Preserve the seller's original wording where useful, but distinguish it from your own issue identification.

The next documentation stage covers the Saved Item's analyze plotting tools, bulk annotations, and the Price Guide proof view using real, populated examples.

Examine Saved Item sales data

Once you've saved auction records into a Saved Item, its manage sales data link opens the Sales Data Manager. Here you examine the historical evidence behind a price comparison.

Archived sales originate in Search Sales. Save the relevant records into a Saved Item before opening its data manager.

Review the sales table

Open Saved Items, find the item, and choose manage sales data. The table lists the end date, sold status, displayed price, bid count where applicable, title, listing type, seller, and eBay item ID. Expand a row or choose show image to inspect photographs; choose open details for the individual archived record.

Sold matters: the displayed price on a listing that did not sell is not a realized sale. A listing with unknown status is not a confirmed sale either.

Select and export records

Check one or more rows before using actions that apply to a subset. check all and uncheck all manage the selection. show images and hide images help compare photographs. annotate selected begins image-by-image review of checked records, while annotate all covers the entire Saved Item.

Choose export selected to save a CSV of checked records, or export all for the entire Saved Item. remove selected removes records from this Saved Item, not from the historical marketplace archive; check the selection carefully before confirming.

The analyze button opens the available charts when the Saved Item contains records. Continue with Market Analysis.

Keep comparisons meaningful

Confirm each issue from photographs as well as titles. A mixed lot, an unsold asking price, and a completed single-item sale are different kinds of evidence. Separate or clearly label records that do not describe comparable objects.

Return to Creating Saved Items or Price Guides when your research group is ready.

Chart historical prices and sales activity

BSPi's Market Analysis tools turn the auction records in a Saved Item into charts. They are most useful when those records describe genuinely comparable collectibles.

This is the search data from which a Saved Item is assembled. Open charts from that Saved Item's manage sales data view, not directly from Search Sales.

Open Market Analysis

From Saved Items, open manage sales data on an item containing archived records, then choose analyze.

The analysis window offers these controls:

Control	Choices	Purpose
Scope	All records; Selected records	Compare the entire item with a checked subset.
Chart	Price Trend; Volume by Month; Sold Status; Bid Distribution; Price Distribution	Choose a view suited to your question.
Grouping	Raw; Month	Examine individual observations or group by month.
Filter	Include all; Sold only	Distinguish reported listing amounts from confirmed sales.

Understand the five charts

Price Trend plots reported prices across time. Volume by Month shows how many archived records appeared in a period; volume does not by itself establish collector demand. Sold Status separates reported outcomes. Bid Distribution shows bidding activity, while Price Distribution shows where displayed prices cluster.

Start with Sold only when studying realized prices. Choose Include all to examine the broader marketplace, keeping in mind that unsold prices are not achieved sales. Some fixed-price listings do not have a meaningful auction bid count.

Compare meaningful subsets

Check records that share an issue, year, condition, or another defensible characteristic, then set Scope to Selected records. Compare with All records. A large difference may reveal that the Saved Item contains unlike material. Open unusual sale records before treating a price spike as a market shift.

Charts support research; they are not an automatic appraisal. Use Sales Data to check the underlying evidence and Price Guides to organize the results.

Annotate images and identify collectibles

The Image Annotation workspace lets you examine auction photographs individually and record identifying details. Use it to distinguish varieties, describe mixed lots, and supplement the seller's title with evidence visible in the image.

Begin by studying the archived photographs. This picture shows an item-detail view; the separate Image Annotation workspace opens from Saved Item Sales Data.

Open the workspace

In Saved Items, select manage sales data. Check specific records and choose annotate selected, or choose annotate all to work through the Saved Item.

The workspace displays thumbnails, a larger current photograph, and an annotation form. Use Prev Image, Next Image, Prev Item, and Next Item to move through the queue. You can jump to an auction position or an eBay item ID.

Describe what the photograph shows

Begin with Description and Short caption. Choose the Primary type to distinguish patches, neckerchiefs, slides, buckles, books, medals, pins, and other objects. If the image shows a lot, mark it as such and enter an object count when known.

Other identifying fields cover years, anniversaries, OA lodges and numbers, councils and numbers, camps or properties, major events, and PatchScan references. Record a fact only when the photograph or reliable supporting evidence justifies it.

Use the Status and exclusion controls when an image is irrelevant, duplicated, or otherwise unsuitable for the study. A photograph showing several different objects should not automatically become a comparable sale for one of them.

Save deliberately

The workspace provides Save, Save + Prev, and Save + Next, alongside navigation that does not save. Check the status message before leaving an image.

Reuse details carries identifying fields forward to images without saved annotations. Use it cautiously when reviewing different issues; inspect the proposed values before saving. An existing saved annotation takes precedence over carried-forward values.

Annotations are private working notes. They can improve identification without making uncertain years, issue attributions, or authenticity judgments certain. After reviewing the queue, return to Sales Data and your Price Guide.

Preview, print, and save a Price Guide proof

The Price Guide Proof lets you check the sequence, descriptions, and historical sales summaries of a guide before you share it or save a PDF.

Price Guide Manager — Search records → Saved Item → Price Guide

+ Create Price Guide

✓ Check Filtered □ Uncheck Filtered ✎ Edit Selected ✖ Stop Editing 🗑 Delete Selected ↶ Undo Delete

You have no Price Guides yet. Create your first Price Guide

Begin in the Price Guide Manager. After adding Saved Items to a guide, open its editor and select proof / print view.

Open the proof

In Price Guides, open the guide editor and follow proof / print view. A guide without Saved Items produces an empty proof, so first assemble and review its entries.

Choose the right detail

Aggregate only gives a compact summary for each Saved Item, including the number of records, the number sold, median and average sold prices, the observed sold-price range, and average bids. This is useful for reviewing issue order and overall layout.

Aggregate + sales also includes an itemized table showing each archived listing's date, result, price, bids, and title. Use this view to spot a surprising value, a repeated listing, or a sale that does not belong with the others.

Turn on DRAFT watermark when producing working copies. Before distributing a guide, check descriptions, classifications, sold counts, and the arithmetic behind the summaries.

Print or save a PDF

Select Print / Save PDF, then use the browser's print dialog to choose Save as PDF or a printer. Inspect the exported pages for cut-off tables, awkward breaks, missing sections, and readable text. If you change the Saved Items or their sales data, open the proof again and generate a new copy.

A proof summarizes archived observations rather than guaranteeing what another collectible will sell for. Be especially careful not to treat unsold asking prices or mixed lots as comparable single-item realized prices.

Continue with Creating Price Guides, Saved Item Sales Data, and Market Analysis when revising the evidence.

Account Settings

The Settings area groups account information into separate tabs. Identify the tab you need before changing anything.

The Settings page groups membership, security, payment history, and support into separate sections. Select the section that matches what you need to manage.

Continue below for step-by-step instructions and examples ↓

After signing in, choose Settings from the top navigation. The page is organized into Overview, Subscription, Security, Payment History, and Support sections.

Overview

The verified Overview screen shows your username, account email, Membership Through date, and Account Status. It also offers a request change link beside the email address. Check your membership date here if you are unsure when access is scheduled to expire.

Use the relevant tab for subscriptions, security, payment history or support. Confirm any payment-related change through the provider's confirmation.

For assistance, see Getting help. For sign-in trouble, see Resetting your password.

Other Settings tabs

- Subscription includes payment/subscription information, access-through date, renewal, and cancellation information. The Subscription section states that access continues through the displayed membership expiration date after cancellation.
- Security provides fields for current password, new password, and confirmation. The template states that the new password takes effect on the next login.
- Payment History displays a PayPal payment-history section when applicable.

- Support displays the support email address and an additional phone/text option marked for urgent use or after other support avenues have been exhausted.

For cancellation instructions, see Canceling or managing a subscription.

Resetting your password

The recovery page is the place to begin when you cannot sign in. Follow the steps below rather than creating another account.

The screenshot shows the 'BSPi Password Reset' page. At the top, there is a logo and the title 'BSPi Password Reset' with the subtitle 'Reset access for BoyScoutPatch.info member accounts.' Below this, a yellow box contains a note: 'Old or expired accounts are supported. If you no longer have access to an old email address or do not remember any account information, email support@boyscoutpatch.info.' The form has two main sections: 'PayPal Subscriber ID' with a text input field containing 'I-XXXXXXXXXXXX' and a note 'Enter your PayPal subscription ID if you have it.', and 'Or enter your username' with a text input field containing 'username' and a note 'Either the subscriber ID or username is usually enough to start a reset request.' At the bottom of the form are three buttons: 'Reset Password' (light grey), 'Back to Login' (dark blue), and 'Become a Member' (brown). Below the buttons is a link: 'Do not remember any information? Email support'. At the very bottom, there is a small copyright notice: 'Part of the BoyScoutPatch.com family of sites. © Brett Estrade / BoyScoutPatch.info (BSPi). Rights reserved in original public site content and presentation.'

Use the password-reset page if you cannot sign in. Enter the account identifier requested by the form and follow the recovery instructions; never send your password to support.

Continue below for step-by-step instructions and examples ↓

If you cannot sign in, open the BSPi password reset page, also linked from the login page.

1. Enter your subscriber ID or your username, as prompted by the reset form.
2. Submit the reset request.
3. If the account information matches a valid email address, look for the email with further instructions.
4. If you cannot complete the process, contact support@boyscoutpatch.info.

The reset page says either a subscriber ID or username is usually sufficient. Do not send your current or proposed password to support. This page documents the publicly visible reset form; we have not submitted a live reset request.

The public homepage explains membership choices and payment options. Review the current price and renewal terms before subscribing, since these can change.

Continue below for step-by-step instructions and examples ↓

The BSPi homepage currently advertises full access for $9.95 per month or $59.95 per year, with PayPal and Stripe subscription options. Prices and terms may change; confirm the amount and renewal terms shown at checkout before paying.

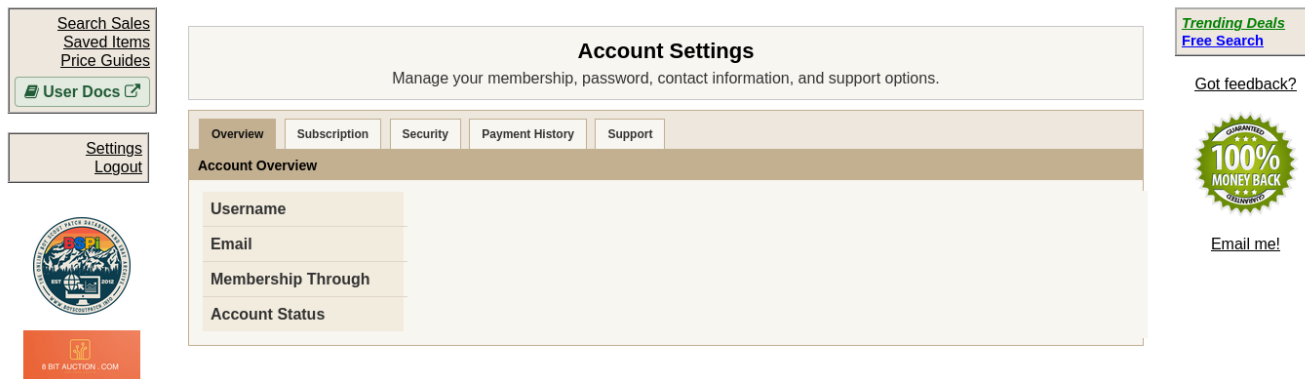

The public site also links to a free search, trial-access request, and member login. Full membership provides access to historical marketplace research tools, including searches by keywords, seller, item ID, date range, price and bid count, with image-text searching for some records.

To begin, visit the homepage, choose an available membership option, review its terms, and follow the payment provider's checkout instructions. Afterward, use the member login.

If you are a former founding member, the homepage asks you to email support before signing up to inquire about potential eligibility for a discounted membership.

Canceling or managing a subscription

The Settings navigation is where members can find subscription-related information. Locate the relevant tab before reviewing the cancellation instructions below.

The Settings navigation includes a Subscription section. Open it to review membership and cancellation information; the account details are hidden in this illustration.

Continue below for step-by-step instructions and examples ↓

BSPi publicly advertises that members can cancel anytime. Before canceling, identify whether your subscription was established through PayPal or Stripe, and check the billing or subscription-management options provided with your original payment.

For help identifying or stopping a recurring subscription, contact support@boyscoutpatch.info. Include your username and enough non-sensitive transaction context to locate the membership, but never send a password or complete payment-card details.

Do not assume that logging out, abandoning the account, or simply not using BSPi cancels recurring billing. Retain confirmation from the payment provider or support.

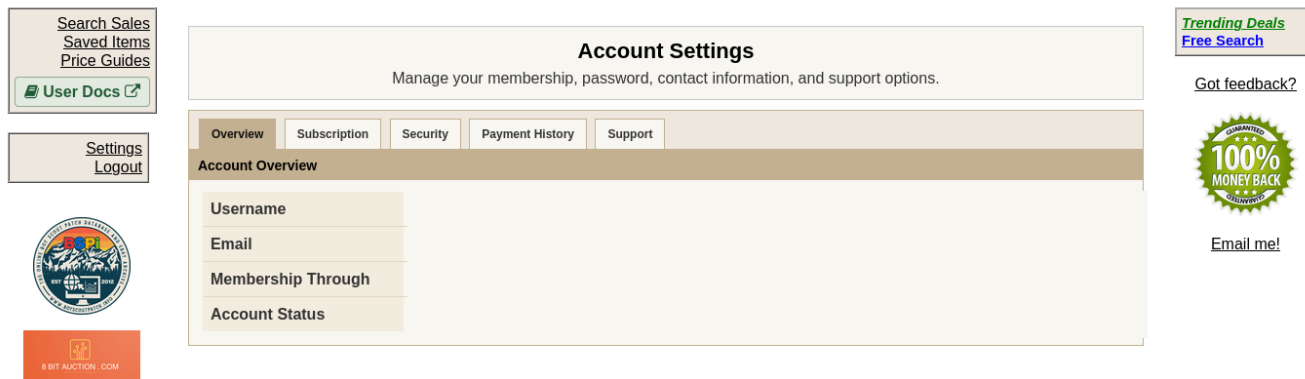

Before canceling, review the current membership expiration date and the confirmation displayed by the payment provider.

What BSPi's Settings page says

The Settings → Subscription page includes an Unsubscribe / Cancel section and states that BSPi access continues until the displayed membership expiration date after cancellation. The page also has a Renew Subscription link. Check the actual account and payment-provider confirmation when canceling.

Getting help

Support is accessible through the member interface. The instructions below explain what information to include in a useful report.

© Brett Estrade / BoyScoutPatch.info (BSPi). Rights reserved in the software and site. Contributors retain their rights in original research and submitted content.

You can find help through the Support section of Settings. When reporting a problem, include the page address, what happened, your browser and operating system, and steps to reproduce it.

Continue below for step-by-step instructions and examples ↓

For account, subscription, password recovery, or research-tool problems, email support@boyscoutpatch.info.

For a useful support request, include your BSPi username (not your password), a short description of what you were trying to do, the relevant page or item ID, and what happened instead. If applicable, include a screenshot with personal or payment information hidden.

For password problems, start with password reset. For billing questions, see membership and cancellation.

Never email passwords or complete payment-card information.

Reporting a technical problem

When something does not work—such as a search result, image preview, individual item page, or navigation control—please include as much of the following as you can:

1. What you were trying to do, and what happened instead.
2. The page URL or item ID where the problem occurred.
3. Steps to reproduce it, starting from a known page when possible.

4. Your operating system (for example, Windows, macOS, iOS, Android, or Linux) and version if known.
5. Your browser (for example, Firefox, Chrome, Safari, or Edge) and version if known.
6. A screenshot showing the problem, if possible, with sensitive information removed.
7. Approximately when it occurred, especially if it is intermittent.

You do not need to know every technical detail to ask for help. A clear description and a link to the affected item are already useful. Do not include passwords, session cookies, or payment-card information.

About BSPI: from PatchTrends.com to today

PatchTrends.com first became publicly available at the end of 2012.

BoyScoutPatch.info (BSPI) grew out of that project and continues its commitment to Scouting memorabilia collecting.

The resource seeks to preserve and organize historical marketplace evidence so collectors can learn from past transactions rather than rely solely on current asking prices or isolated anecdotes. Its search tools, growing image-text capabilities, and long-running archive reflect an ongoing investment in making collecting research useful and accessible.

BSPI is developed from a collector's perspective: the goal is to complement the experience and judgment of people in the hobby, not replace them. Maintaining and improving the archive is part of a sustained commitment to the resource and to the collectors who use it.

Today's BSPi homepage shows how the former PatchTrends.com project has grown into a broader historical marketplace research resource for collectors.
